Sunday, July 31

- Scattered showers and thunderstorms will again be noted across the southern California mountains and deserts, Sierra, and northern mountains Sunday and Monday. A few storms are also possible for western portions of the Central Valley. Scattered showers and thunderstorms will linger over the Sierra and far northern mountains each day through midweek, with chances again increasing across southern California by late in the week.
  - Thunderstorms Sunday and Monday across far northern California will bring a threat for dry lightning and gusty and erratic winds, yielding elevated to critical fire weather conditions over much of Siskiyou and Modoc Counties
  - Heavy rainfall is also possible with some storms through Tuesday, and may lead to localized flash flooding. The greatest threat for heavy rain Sunday will be over the Sierra in portions of Fresno and Tulare Counties, much of the Mojave Desert, the mountains of Los Angeles, Ventura, San Bernardino, and Riverside Counties, and the Apple and Lucerne Valleys where a Flood Watch is in effect through Sunday evening.
  - The threat for heavy rain will spread north along the Sierra and across the Klamath Mountains and Modoc Plateau Monday and Tuesday
  - Some localized burn scar impacts are also possible depending on the location of heaviest rainfall. At this time, there are no specific burn scars of most concern.
- Temperatures will remain quite warm across far northern California today, with moderate to locally high heat impacts. Cooler, more seasonable early August readings will return for all areas Monday and continue through late week.
